Composite Description

The composite returns represent the total returns of all fully discretionary portfolios with an Emerging Markets Debt - Total Return investment mandate. The Emerging Markets Debt - Total Return strategy may invest across the entire EMD universe and is not constructed relative to a benchmark. The Emerging Markets Debt - Total Return strategy is a long-biased approach with a focus on risk-adjusted returns that seeks to achieve asset class returns with significantly less volatility. The strategy may have a gross exposure exceeding 100% (permitted up to 200% maximum), although it will typically range from 100-140%. The strategy may also employ shorting to hedge exposures and express outright views, but will not have a net short exposure. Net exposure will typically range from 60-90%. The portfolio management team may also tactically allocate up to 75% of the portfolio to cash if it has low conviction on the market.

Calculation of Performance Returns

The composite returns are reported net of foreign withholding taxes on dividends, interest and capital gains. The composite returns presented represent past performance and is not a reliable indicator of future results, which may vary.
